U.S. Coal Miners Approve Contract, End 24-Day Strike

By Peter Milius

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (WP).— United Mine Workers president Arnold Miller today ordered striking miners back to work after he signed a new contract with the coal industry, ending a 24-day work stoppage.
Mr. Miller said the miners approved the three-year pact by a vote of 44,754 to 34,741. He said they would begin returning to work tomorrow.

A coal industry spokesman called the contract a "very for-ward-looking agreement."

It calls for a 64-per-cent boost in wages and fringe benefits over its three-year span but M. Miller, who earlier had called it one of the "fattest" in recent memory, said he does not consider it

Asked if the UMW thought the price of coal would rise to pay for the new contract, Mr. Miller said, "We don't know how much it will go up. I don't think it requires (higher prices) but I'm not saying they [the companies] won't" increase coal prices.

Although 44 per cent of the miners voting rejected the agreement, Mr. Miller said they "will accept the majority rule" and go hack to work.

"I'm hopeful that in the future

we can reach an agreement

without a strike, the union leader said. He said he was aware of the effect the strike had on the nation's economy "but it could have been worse."

N.T. Camicia, chairman of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, said in a statement after the contract signing that the operators are "naturally pleased that the new agreement has been ratified by the mine He said the mine owners also approved it.

"Now the coal mines, which have been idle since Nov. 12, can be reopened promptly and we can get on with the job of supplying the nation with this vitally needed fuel," he said.

"The new three-year contract, while a very costly one for the industry, is a very forward looking agreement and will be of great benefit to the miners." Mr. Camicia added.

The UMW's more than 100,000 working members produce about 70 per cent of the nation's coal. Their walkout led to more than 23,000 layoffs in the railroad industry (which derives about 10 per cent of its revenue from hauling coal) and the steel industry. Which converts coal into coke for melting iron ore.

The ratification was a victory for Mr. Miller, who came to the third, plus quarterly cost-of-liv-

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (WP) — The Senate yesterday approved a $2.7-billion foreign aid bill by one vote-46 to 45-after voting to give President Ford two more months to solve the Cyprus crisis or face a total congressional cutoff of all U.S. weapons aid to

The bill was backed by the White House some Republican loyalists and a coalition of middle-of-the-road senators long faithful to the aid program. It was steered to final passage by Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D. Minn. At the White House today, press secretary Ronald Nessen said of the Senate vote: "The President does feel that that's a statesmanlike action." He also said that Secretary of State Henry Kissinger would be making further attempts to re-solve the Greek-Turkish differences over Cyprus when he goes to Brussels next week for a NATO meeting that will include Greek and Turkish officials.

Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., said all aid to Turkey should be prohibited immediately because Ankara had violated aid agreements by using U.S. weapons to invade and occupy portions of Cyprus. Sen. Ragleton said a delay in stopping weapons shipments would only allow the Turks to entrench themselves in Cyprus and refuse to negotiate, thus letting them reap the fruits of their aggression and force a partition of the island.

ever, that Turkey had only a care-taker government at present and therefore negotiations needed more time.

House to Act Next Week It was the second time that Sen Eagleton has been thwarted in efforts to obtain an immediate cutoff. In October, Sen. Eagleton and his House allies, Rep. Ben Rosenthal, D-N. Y., Rep. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., and Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., had pressed for a cutoff only to have the White House win approval of language postponing it to allow negotiations. The earlier postponement is due to expire next Tuesday, but if the Humphrey extension is approved when the House takes up its version of the aid bill next week, the White House will have another two months. Rep. Sarbanes told reporters that he will make a fight for an immediate cutoff in the House and the issue could endanger the whole aid measure.

The Senate's one-vote passage of the bill reflects deep congressional unhappiness with the aid program. It has always had some critics, particularly among conservatives, who regarded it as throwing money down a rathole. But in recent years, liberals like (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

For European Security Summit

Brezhnev Seeks Giscard's Support

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, Dec. 5 (IHT).—Soviet Communist party leader Leonid Brezhnev moved quickly today to line up French backing for the European security conference dur-ing his first day of talks with President Valery Giscard d'Es-

"The rapid and happy termination of work on the pan-European conference at the high-est level," he said in a toast tonight, would be the surest way of reinforcing detente.

Following the day's meetings at Rambouillet castle, Mr. Brezhnev seld that his recur, meeting in Vladivostok with President Ford had contributed to détente, but he insisted on the importance of the security conference.

Earlier, Mr. Brezhnev's pross spokesman told newsmen that it was the "most important event in the process of detente." Spokesman Leonid Zamyatin said that the "Soviet side urged that the conference be ended at the highest level."

Cloudless Skies

The overall Soviet goal, Mr. Brezhnev explained tonight in his toast, was to achieve "peace ful and cloudless skies on our planet."

Although praising the Ford meeting, the Soviet party leader said that problems remained, including the "explosive Middle East situation." He also said the 'accumulation and improvement of armaments" remained a problem, but he was not specific. The Russians have been press ing the French to support their plan for a 35-nation summit meeting next summer to crown the now two-year-old negotiation on settling accounts in Europe. Many observers believe that he sees this as a capstone to his career before relinquishing power to younger men in the Soviet

Elections Called in Denmark AfterRebuff of Inflation Plan

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 5 (AP) .- Premier Poul Hartling tonight ordered previously unscheduled elections after the Folketing (parliament) refused to accept unconditionally a plan for wage-price curbs. The plan was introduced by his minority Liberal government on a take-it-or-leave-it basis Tuesday. Mr. Hartling set the elections for Jan. 9. Mr. Hartling's announcement was greeted with a mixture of applause, protest and laughter in the Folketing, which had gone through an all-day debate with a record 42 members mounting the rostrum to speak.

Mr. Hartling, 60, who took power following an election a year ago and ruled on the smallest parliamentary basis in Danish history-22 of the Folketing's 179 seats-did not formally resign. This means he can continue in power after the elections unless he is toppled by a vot: of no confidence in the new Folketing. 12 Parties in Folketing

Mr. Hartling ignored appeals by non-Socialist parties-and even a motion of confidence ordered by one of them-when he decided that the debate in the 12-party Folketing had made it clear that there was no majority in favor of his crisis plan and that no constructive alternatives had been

The crisis plan included a prolongation throughout 1975 of all existing wage agreements, temporary abolition of cost-of-living wage adjustments—to be partially compensated for with tax-free cash payments by the government to all wage-earners-a freeze on dividends and of profits on goods and services, and a freeze of farm-product prices.

Rules Testimony Not Essential

Sirica Throws Out Subpoenas for Nixon campaign officials-H.R. Halde-

By Robert Siner

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (IHT). -Judge John Sirica ruled today that testimony by former President Richard Nixon in either oral or written form was "not essential" to the defense in the Watergate cover-up trial and ordered that the proceedings continue without interruption.

The judge held that Mr. Nixon's testimony was not "indispensable or necessary to prevent a failure of justice." He noted that the former president had "been accused in effect of being an accomplice of the defendants" and that Mr. Nixon's testimony would be "subject to the instruction to the jury that it should be received with caution and scrutinized with care," and therefore its potential value should not be "unrealistically overestimated.

He made the ruling in denying requests by three of the five defendants, all former top Nixon administration and re-election man, John Ehrlichman and John Mitchell—that the trial be delayed until the ailing former sident is able to give a deposition early next month.

The judge also formally dismissed two subpoenas commanding Mr. Nixon to testify. As a result of today's action, Mr. Nixon may never have to testify under oath about his part in the June 17, 1972, burglary of Democratic national headquarters in the Watergate complex and the subsequent cover-up attempt.

Plea by Nixon's Lawrers

A court-appointed panel of three doctors last week informed the judge that Mr. Nixon would not be well enough to answer questions by deposition before Jan. 6 and would not be able to come to Washington to testify before Feb. 16.

However, earlier today, attorneys for the former president argued that Jan. 6 would be the earliest date on which he could begin preparing to give testimony and that "it would be highly unfair to require Mr. Nixon to be subjected to interrogation proposed, until a date well after Jan. 6, 1975."

They added that "the time necessary for Mr. Nixon adequately to prepare for interrogation is substantial."

The three defendants contended that Mr. Nixon's testimony was essential to their getting a fair trial.

Attorneys for Ehrlichman asked that the trial be recessed and the sequestered jury allowed to go home for the Christmas holidays, to return when Mr. Nixon's testimony became available. Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Haldeman joined in the request. The prosecution strongly attacked the request, contending that the jury would be exposed to all the trial publicity it has so far avoided. In addition, the (Continued on Page 3, Col. 1)

Soviet Farms Fail to Catch Up With West

By Peter Osnos

MOSCOW, Dec. 5 (WP),-The stalls at Moscow's central market, where farmers sell crops from their small private plots, are down to winter essentials: beets, carrots, onions, potatoes, cabbages, some apples and a few amail pears.

Next door, on the meat racks, low-quality cuts of veal, mutton and beef are selling at high

And outside, at a state produce shoppers bundled up against the first heavy snows the season are shuffling through a long queue for hard-toget Egyptian oranges.

The Soviet Union may have reached parity with the United States in strategic armaments and is rated the world's second industrial power, but when it comes to feeding the people, this vast land has a long way to go to match the affluent West.

According to recent indepen-dent studies, the average Soviet citizen eats considerably less than half as much meat as his American counterpart and relies on more than twice as much bread and potatoes to round out his

Best Selection

The paltry supply of fresh food at Moscow's main market represents the best selection available in the city. In more remote areas. scarcities are still common. A Western visitor to Novosibirsk, the largest city in Siberia, was startled this summer by an unseemly rush in a downtown store to grab a few pieces of meat that were put on display.

When one asks why the Soviet Union does not do more to help solve world food problems, specialists here suggest that maybe this country still has too much to do for itself. Nearly 50,000 state farms (sovkhozes) and collective farms (kolkhozes) do not yet meet the requirements of the 250 million Soviet citizens.

The shortcomings are a relative matter. Great famines like those that swept the Soviet Union in the 1930s are no longer threatening. Today's specter of starving millions in Africa and India hardly includes Russians, who eat so much they are inclined to be dumpy.

Indeed, the consensus of Western experts is that Soviet agricultural progress over the last decade has been substantial, reflecting enormous efforts at mechanization, fertilization, land reclamation, price supports, wage improvements and industrialization of production.

Greater Investment

Official figures show that about 60 per cent more money has been invested in agriculture during the current five-year plan than in the previous one—an expenditure that says more about the scale of the Soviet effort than about ultimate accomplishments.

Already, the Russians are the world's largest producer of wheat and feed grains. By the standards of the hungry millions in other parts of the globe, the Russians seem ready to be providers instead of consumers, guarantors

On the contrary, however, it is force. the Soviet Union that twice in the past three years has contracted for huge American grain purchases, spurring the upward trend of world commodity prices.

Despite all the progress of the last decade, a single especially bad harvest in 1972 caused the Russians a whole range of serious internal economic problems: the national budget had to be readfusted by 20 billion rubles ($26 billion) according to a report at the time, and supplies of dairy products and staples dropped so

The Senate vote held no surprises. The government was backed by Mr. Moro's Christian Democrate, by the Republicans of Deputy Premier Ugo La Malfa and by the rival Socialist and Social Democratic parties.

The moderately rightist Lib-erals, as expected, abstained to demonstrate their criticism of Mr. Moro's left-of-center policies. The Communists, independent leftists and neo-Fascists cast the dissenting ballots.

Leading an Italian government for the fourth time, Mr. Moro told the parliament earlier this week that Italians must curb their wage demands, reduce their heating and consumption of imported meat, give up many other privileges and avoid waste if

Italy is to cure its economic ills. "The crisis we are going through is certainly the most serious Italy has had to face in the past 30 years," Mr. Moro told the parliament. "These coming months will undoubtedly be among the most painful and the hardest in our national history."

> To deal with the crisis, the Russians made their celebrated purchase of 20 million tons of American grain. The transaction pushed grain prices up sharply and depleted U.S. reserves, for which U.S. Agriculture Department officials continue to be

Then last month, the Kremlin attempted another big U.S. purchase, although the predicted harvest of around 200 million tons this year is the second largest in Soviet history. The White House blocked the sale until a compromise—a smaller amount. with longer-term delivery-could be worked out.

The Soviet move puzzled many agricultural analysts, considering the advertised size of the just-ended harvest and the unattractively high prices on the world

Modest Appraisal

One explanation for the attempted purchase may be that the harvest was not as big as expected. In the leadership's main speech on the anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution last month, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said, "In spite of unfavorable weather conditions in a number of regions, the gross grain harvest . is not a bad one —a noticeably modest appraisal.

But probably the main reason for the Soviet Union's continued inability to maintain itself is the tremendous push to upgrade the diet of the people by supplying them more meat Meat consumption, although low by Western standards, has increased about one-fourth since 1965. This has entailed the raising of huge and ever-expanding livestock herds. The Soviet grain purchases were made rather than abandon ambitious livestock goals. No matter how hard the Russians try to upgrade agriculture production, certain problems cannot be overcome. Only about 11 per cent of the land is arable. Capricious weather and a short growing season reduce potential even further and make long-range planning difficult. There is, understandably, a continuing campaign to expand the amount of usable land. The use of manpower represents another dilemma for the Kremlin. As in the United States, there is a steady drifting away from rural areas by young people in favor of the higher salaries and better life-style in the cities. But the Russians need far more hands than the highly mechanized American farmers. According to U.S. statistics, 31 per cent of the Soviet labor force works in agriculture compared to only 4 per cent in the United States. Moreover, the statistics show that the Soviet output per worker is about 10 per cent that of the American production figure.

The combination of a harsh. unpredictable climate, relatively primitive machinery and low productivity keeps Soviet yields below what the country evidently needs to keep pace with growth —particularly in light of the stress on better diet.

Pakistan Defeats India for a Seat On Panel at UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Dec. (WP).-India and Pakistan participated in a popularity contest here yesterday. The result was Pakistan 98, India 64 an embarrassing blow to the pride of New Delhi, once an unchallenged leader of Third World forces at the UN.

The contest was for one of the four Asian seats on the UN Economic and Social Council next year. Both India and Pakistan are council members now, but China had indicated for the first time that it would be a candidate for a seat, and big powers are normally seated where they wish to be. Two other seats went to an Arab nation— Yemen-and to Japan.

In the UN context, India and Pakistan had been re-districted into the same seat. Pakistani Ambassador Iqbal Akhund, vicepresident of the council this year, is now in line to be its president next year. It is a crucial post, for the council is the final UN arbiter of issues such as multinational corporations and the UN program for a new nomic order."

For the third straight day, the mood of reform was maintained by the House Democratic Caucus, whose 291 members continued to change the procedures under which the House conducts its business, handles legislation and affects national affairs.

'Moral Decay' vs. Civil Rights In Boys' Study of 'Sissy' Arts

By Michael Knight

(NYT).—The president of the New Milford, Conn., School Board rejected yesterday complaints that the board's policy of requiring sixth-grade boys to study home economics is leading to "homosexuality" and "moral decay."

Thomas Eagen, the board president, said that the policy would continue despite threats by two Baptist ministers to begin court action against it.

The Rev. James Clemmons and the Rev. Lynn Mays, who preach together at the Faith Baptist remple in a trailer off U.S. Route 7, have promised to sue the School Board for its decision this year to make mechanical shop and home economics classes mandatory for both boys and girls.

Genesis Cited

"By having a young boy cook or sew, wearing aprons, we're pushing a boy into homo-sexuality," Mr. Mays asserted. "It's contrary to what the home and the Bible have stood for. When God set up the human race, there was a division of sexes."

"A woman's place is in the home," he said, adding: "That's where God put them, barring unusual circumstances,"

Daniel Center, the superintendent of schools, said that before this fall the boys in the town's middle school vocational training took only industrial arts courses and the girls took only home economics courses.

This fall, he said, because of new civil rights legislation, the classes are integrated and children in grades seven and eight are free to choose which of the two courses to take. But the 330 sixth-grade students are required to take one semester of home economics and one semester of industrial arts.

"That way, they can know what they're choosing for the next two years," Mr. Center explained. "It's only for 16 hours HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 5 of a whole semester, so I don't know what the fuss is all about. I think we are right in this and we are going to continue it."

Mr. Clemmons, however, said he feels the requirements erode his constitutional and religious right as a father to determine the pattern of his children's lives.

"My son doesn't want the course and I don't want him to be a sissy," he said.

Mr. Center said Mr. Clemmons's son, James, had been excused from the home economics courses for "religious reasons."

The group concluded: "The most disturbing feature of the present forecast is the continuation, on unchanged policies, of a very high rate of inflation and the likelihood even of some acceleration into the 20-25-per-cent range." The rate has recently been about 17 per cent. The institute also predicted that the value of the British pound would fall by 4 per cent over the next year, the gross national product would go up by no more than one-half of 1 per cent next year, and real personal disposable income would drop by 2 per cent, despite a 23-per-cent surge in average earnings.

Soviet Artists Reject an Offer Of Exhibit, Citing Harassment

MOSCOW, Dec. 5 (NYT),-A group of nonconformist Soviet ar-tists here has turned down an offer by the Moscow City Council to let them hold an indoor exhibit of their works later this month, one of its organizers said vesterday.

Oskar Rabin, whose works have been shown in the West, contended that the Moscow artists were rejecting the opportunity, which they had sought for several months, on the ground that they would be harassed afterward by authorities as happened after two outdoor exhibits in September.

A group of artists in Leningrad still plans to hold a similar exhibit this month. A spokesman for these artists, Igor Sinyanin, reported by telephone from Leningrad that the city officials there had agreed to the four-day exhibit but had deferred its opening until Dec 22.

50 Artists Expected Alexander Glazer, a Moscow

poet and art collector who has been active in unofficial artist circles here, estimated today that about 50 artists would be exhibiting 200 paintings at the Leningrad exhibit, which is planned at the Gaza Palace of Culture.

The decision of the Moscow artists, which Mr. Glazer said was made Tuesday after three 1875 of discussions, took observers of the art scene here by surprise. since the artists had announce this fall that an indoor exhibition was a key goal of theirs and had pressed city authorities for

There was some initial speculation that the rejection of the offer reflected a certain disunity within the unofficial movement, but this was not confirmed by the artists themselves

Divide and Split

Last month, Mr. Glazer had charged that Soviet authorities were trying to divide and split the artists in order to bring them under control.

The nonconformist artists had attracted attention in the West in September when an attempted outdoor show in a Moscow vacant lot was disrupted by buildozers and bands of roving vigilantes. Soviet authorities, embarrassed by the publicity, permitted a second outdoor exhibit to be held without incident two weeks later.

The artists say that some of their group have since been subjected to interrogations and temporary detention, threats, loss of work and even assault Mr. Rabin yesterday cited instances of harassment in which he said one artist, Alexander Pennanen, had been put briefly in a mental hospital and another was called back into the army for reserve duty.

MOSCOW, Dec. 5 (UPI).-Fifteen dissidents have issued an appeal on behalf of the editor of a non-Communist Bussian retionalist journal who, friends said, was arrested last week.

The appeal, made available to Western newsmen Monday, urged supporters of human rights to speak out in support of Vladimir Osipov, 36, who reportedly was arrested Thursday in his home town of Alexandrov, 60 miles north of Moscow. Until March, he had edited the two-year-old typescript journal Veche, which friends said criticized Soviet authorities for paying insufficient attention to the Rus sian heritage. They said Vecha was never disloyal, however. Veche was closed down, and he

More Accuracy

Although at points I missed Peter Hall's exciting Covent Garden production, in particular in the second-act orgy before the calf of gold idol, the piece is effective enough as a dramatic oratorio. And in the concert hall conductor with Boulez's dedication to precision and clarity can perhaps obtain a more accurate performance than would ever be possible in the opera house. Certainly I heard more of the score on this occasion than I have ever done in the past.

By virtue of his demand for crisp rhythms and keen articulation. Boulez made even the densest and most heavily written choral passages as clear as they will ever be. And, no doubt because of the lengthy rehearsals made possible by the records, both his singers and players had fully grasped the significance of the involved German text. The Solti's performances were pos-sibly more impassioned, made one more aware of the pagan lusts and vulgarity let loose, and expressed so emphatically Schoenberg, in the golden calf scene, but Boulez's interpretation, though cooler, was strongwilled and irresistible in its incessant forward movement. His careful exposition of the involved musical and philosophical arsument by no means precluded his involvement in the score.

Moses's whole role is written in Sprechgesang, that Schoenbergian halfway house between singing and talking. Gunther Reich was complete master of the idiom, although he could not convey the tremendous spiritual depth and feeling of an Old Testament prophet achieved by Hans Hotter in the American performances. In all the other performances I have heard, Richard Lewis has been the Aaron, plausible, ingratiating and rather sly. Richard Cassily did not attempt that amount of characterization, but instead concentrated on giving us a finely sung and confident exposition of the notes. That meant some loss in the seeming conflict on interest between the two principals.

A large cast of soloists filled the smaller parts of young virgins, old cripples, wise and unwise priests. Among them Felicity Palmer as a young girl and Gillian Knight as an invalid woman were notable. The BBC Symphony Orchestra proved, on

More Women Seeking Solace in Cloisters

By Judith Harris

ROME (NYT) —Just when life outside the home is finally becoming accessible to Italian women, a surprising number appear to be turning their backs on hard-won jobs and professions to enter cloisters.

Spokesmen for the Roman Catholic Church refer to a "flowering" of religious vocations among women for such strict monastic orders as the Trappists and Carmelites-a situation considered all the more striking because of the general decline in religious vocations in Western Europe,

In the past decade, for in-stance, a Trappist abbey at Vitorchiano, a village in Central Italy. expanded enough to open two new convents in Italy and Argentina and recently sent 10 nuns to the United States to found a

The change has been noticed elsewhere too. In France, fewer women are entering religious insultutions, but those entering cloisters are reported to be on the increase. There is also a marked change in the type of women making such a radical choice as electing an essentially medieval form of religious life. In the Past

In the past in Europe, most girls entering cloisters were very young and of peasant stock. Few were literate. As recently as 1961, only 43 per cent of Italy's 143.-000 Roman Catholic nuns, including 12,000 cloistered nuns, had completed elementary school, For those girls, the austere physical conditions they found in monasteries-the nearly vegetarian diet, the hard labor, the lack of heating the rarity of contacts with the outside world-did not differ drastically from what many had had at home.

Today, however. the young women entering Italian cloisters are older, better educated and guages, when asked why she secluded herself in a cloister, replied: "Because eight languages were not enough. Why would a young woman with an office job in Milan er Rome turn her back so utterly and silence of the convent_in other words, by its very contrast to the life outside, said Ravazzi. To those tempted to undertake it monastic life is singularly spartan, as church spokesmen are the first to warn. The day is rigorously divided into periods of contemplation and work, some of which is executed for the outside world in order to finance the community. An Assisi abbey, for instance, manufactures the cardboard boxes utilized by a large manufacturer of chocolate candies.

In one Italian Capuchin convent, the windows are covered with paper not glass. The nuns sleep on wooden slabs with strawfilled pillows.

Due to such physical conditions and interrupted sleep, the incidence of tuberculous is rela-

While occasionally the grating has been removed along with the thick black drape that traditionally hung over it, clois-tering is still just that; seclusion, silent prayer and contemplation.

It was Pierre Elliott Trudeau who described Canada's position vis-a-vis the United States as like sleeping with an elephant." Even though the pachyderm might have the best of intentions, its twitches could be disturbing to the smaller bedmate, and if it relled over it might be disastrous. The simile was at even across the Atlantic the French have taken much the same attitude, and although the West Germans feel more comintable with the elephant's trunk resting on the Elbe, they, too, have their moments of uneasiness.

There was a time when Great Britain played a role not unlike that of the United States today, and then "twisting the lion's tail" had its own place in the zoological metaphors of diplomacy. It was a form of selfassertion that was sometimes uncomfortable for the lion, just as today's practice of pounding the elephant's toes may annoy or even pain Americans. Mr. Trudeau's oil policies, for example, both as to present prices and the future withholding of all Canadian oil from its southern neighbor, have awakened much concern, which is being expressed during the Prime Minister's visit to Washington.

The Canadian oil policy, in its goals, makes sense. Canada's oil flows south, the eastern provinces have been buying abroad. This was economical in terms of transportation so long as the price of foreign oil remained at a reasonable level. Under the circumstances prevailing since the Arab oil embargo last year, Canada is paying out a lot in foreign exchange for a product which its own soil could supply, provided it was not sold to the United States, and suitable pipelines or other transportation methods linked the oil-producing provinces and territories to the east.

This is recognized in Washington, although those states which are dependent on Canadian oil (as well as the provinces which furnish it) are hostile to the program. What most disturbing about the Canadian federal action is not only its timing and scope, but that Ottawa made no effort to work out its arrangements with Washington -or, for that matter, with Edmonton, capital of Canada's chief oil source.

In other words, the elephant can be seriously troubled by the sudden awakening of its sleeping partner. And the moral for Canada, for Western Europe, for the United States, is that the problem lies less in the respective sizes of the occupants of their common dormitory than in their failure to communicate, failure to understand that they have more in common than in opposition. The Canadian oil policy has its corollary in the matter of developing a joint energy approach by the industrialized countries. To emphasize differences at the expense of recognizing mutual interests is dangerous for all. The elephant is not the only endangered species in the world!

U.S. Economy and the Polls

President Ford was right when he said that the revolution in oil prices is contributing to both inflation and recession simultaneously. For the White House, as always, the question is what to do about it. Each president has to arrive at his own definition of leadership and, as Monday night's press conference suggested, Mr. Ford is still in the process of sorting out his ideas here. It is, after all, less a matter for intellectual decision than of personal manner and character. The struggle over the gasoline tax is worth close attention not only because of its enormous intrinsic importance, but because it is the most visible and revealing example of the way that the new administration is trying to work out an extremely difficult political equation.

The truly curious thing about the gasoline tax proposal is the way that, no matter how often President Ford denounces it, his closest and most trusted subordinates keep bringing it back up and pushing it forward. Mr. Ford noted with satisfaction in the press conference that the U.S. consumption of gasoline has dropped in comparison with last year. Voluntary conservation may be part of the reason. But the greater part is that the price has risen dramatically and the economy is in a recession.

How do we go on to obtain the much larger future savings that Mr. Ford and most other people now consider essential? Here we get to the question of leadership. Mr. Ford pointed to a recent poll showing that 81 per cent of the public are against a higher gasoline tax to cut consumption. "Well, if 81 per cent of the American people agree with my position," he said, "I really don't think a 20cent-a gallon increase in the gasoline tax will go through the Congress, even if I recommend it."

The President has shown an interesting mixture of impulses in recent weeks as he wrestles with that old dilemma of democracy, the decision when to follow public opinion and when to try to influence it. He has taken positions that are extremely unpopular, both in the country and in Congress -for example, the veto of the expansion of veterans' education benefits-in the knowledge that he would doubtless be overridden. He did it because he thought it right. But in the infinitely more important matter of U.S. national dependence on foreign oil, he is prepared to let the polls be his compass. Perhaps 81 per cent of the people answered the poll as they did because they trust him, and are following him while he thinks that he is following them. Perhaps, if Mr. Ford moved in another direction he would find, like other presidents, that he could bring some considerable part of that 81 per

Mr. Ford, incidentally, seems to be sliding toward an alternative to the gasoline tax that would be far more objectionable. If we have to cut oil consumption by taxation, he told the press conference, "there must be a better way to do it." The inference is that he is considering a tax on crude oil—that is to say, levying the 20 cents a gallon before the oil goes into the refinery rather than when it comes out. That would be wrong because it would conceal the tax. But far more important, it would spread the effects of the tax over all oil products, including heating oil and the industrial fuels used to generate electricity. Most families can cut back on gasoline without real hardship. If there is going to be a tax, it ought to be focused specifically on gasoline, rather than being spread over other products where the social impact would be far more hurtful.

The President's economic view is broadening and widening, but a better grasp of the interrelationships of U.S. domestic troubles serly make for easier decisions. He spoke on Monday night of the triad-inflation, recession and the energy crisis-that must be met together. He is talking in terms of the links among the three and the way that each feeds the others. That is progress. But the President is clearly apprehensive that any great and drastic campaign for oil conservation will result in more unemployment. It is necessary to acknowledge that this threat is not imaginary. Over the past year, he and his advisers have been confirmed in their caution by hearing a number of apocalyptic predictions that events (at least so far) have not borne out. As experienced politicians, the men in the White House expect that they would pay a very high price in public trust if they prepared the country at great expense for a crisis that never came. One ought not ascribe too much to President Ford personally, since after all he is quite right in observing that very few people in Congress are pressing him for a higher gasoline tax. Perhaps it is inherent in democracies to be unwilling and unable to prepare themselves for hurricanes, no matter how good the warning. Perhaps the best hope is for a quick and effective response after the storm has arrived and made itself fully felt to the 81 per cent of the public whom the President was citing on Monday night.

Last April, Attorney General William B. Saxbe, in a news con-ference remark that in the Mc-Carthy era "there was a great distrust of the intellectual," added: "One of the changes that's come about is because of the Jewish intellectual, who was in those days very enamored of the Communist party."

The only thing somewhat unusual about these performances is the political level of the persons involved. We are not dealing here with guttersnipes but with presumably educated and sophisticated people.

The very level of these per-

The reaction to incidents like those cited is usually minimization and denial. Those involved always deny their anti-Semitism, and most people defend them It is socially disrespectable today to be overtly anti-Semitic, whence a strong reluctance to own up to it, or accuse another of it.

Our first conclusion must be that anti-Semitism is something strongly repressed, hence always denied. When there is any sort of acknowledgment, a process minimization takes over. Reduc-ed to a foible, an anti-Semitic lapse is made light of, even made subject of jest. Anti-Semitism is the greatest hatred in human history. In duration and intensity, it has no competitor:

What other hatred has lasted some 23 centuries and survived genocide of six million people in its 23d century of existence? I say "survived" because it is very much alive today.

An unexorcisable devil, it has ravaged from age to age, land to land. As one kind wanes, another promptly replaces it. A vapid pre-Christian kind was followed by a "Christian" variety that became oppressive and murderous. Then in succession came rationalist, pseudo-scientific rac-ist, socialist, rightist varieties. Today there are Soviet, Arab (over and beyond political enmity), black, New Left and

"genteel" types Anti-Semitism has known every cruelty: social and civic disabilities, insult, ghettoization, torture, exile, murder.

Through the centuries, even been infected. Estimates of Jews murdered before Hitler range in the multimillions. Is there not warrant to view this enormity as the greatest stain in the history of Western It may, in any case, be seen as a demonic force, endless and bottomless, that defies analytical powers, indeed eludes our very observation. The Jew, "eternal scapegoat," serves apparently to ssuage a deep human need.

Many efforts have been made to understand anti-Semitism, all partly successful Historical causes center on the "deicide' charge, the old theological myth. Yet history can hardly do full justice to the phenomenon: Profound psychological mechanisms are at play. As one psychoanalyst has stated, "Anti-Semitism is more a conflict within a person than between persons."

Savage Forces

Perhaps the most fruitful avenues of explanation explored locate anti-Semitism in thelowest strata of the psyche where savage forces struggle against all restraints and ideals. In the Christian, it would be an un-conscious displaced resentment of his own Christianity; in the non-Christian, a revolt against moral conscience.

Swiss Vote

The article on the Swiss vote on foreign population (IHT, Oct. 21) includes an important inaccuracy. It is wrong to say that the Swiss people will have to vote again on the same subject next spring. The Swiss government has a period of three years from the time an initiative is presented until the referendum takes place. The next initiative sponsored by

Mr. Schwarzenbach was pre-sented last spring and it is very doubtful if our government will organize a referendum before two or three years as the strict measures taken to stabilize the foreign population might make Mr. hwarzenbach withdraw his initiative (a clause to that effect is part of his initiative and this was not the case for the previous one).

Also this next initiative cannot really be compared to the last referendum as it would stop immigration into Switzerland but no foreigner should be asked to leave this country.

Finally, it is quite possible that the Swiss government will modify the constitution so that a period of five years or more could elapse before another referenchm on the same subject can be presented again, E MAYSTRE news bulletins, the big news was that President Ford was going to hold a news conference. The President will answer questions tonight, the announcers breathlessly told us. He will have two statements. His spokesman, Ronald Nessen, refuses to say how "major" they will be.

That evening a man who has made a profession of presidentwatching sat down in front of his television set to watch Gerald Ford. Halfway through, he fell asleep.

The habit of worshipping pres idents is hard to break. After Vietnam, and Watergate, and all the warnings about the Imperial Presidency, the networks still build up a White House news conference as if it were going to produce tablets from Sinal. The newspapers give massive display to what the President says. The magazines weigh his every word But when, again and again, the words are empty of understanding or meaning, the inflated treat-ment looks not only mistaken but silly. People can tell that nothing happened.

Gerald Ford remains what his friends told us he was when he became President: a decent hu-man being. That is still a nice change too. But in terms of today's economic and political realities, he is simply irrelevant.

His conception of political lead-ership was perfectly captured in one statement at the news conference. A poil showed that "81 per cent of the people" were against a 20-cent tax increase on a gallon of gasoline, the President said, so "I think I'm on pretty solid ground" in opposing it. Of course people will always vote for their own short-term comfort if no one explains to them that deeper interests are at stake. That is the point of political leadership in a democracy: to perceive the deeper interests, argue them and then act within the broad limits of an informed public's view. People are amazingly ready to forgo immediate gratification when the reason is made plain. If they were not, democracy would have failed long ago.

Want Action

The United States and the Western world now have an over-whelming interest in reducing their oil consumption. For that is the first and essential step in any plan to cope with the appalling strains that quadrupled oil ex-port prices have imposed on world agriculture, price levels and the stability of the financial system.

There is almost no serious dissent from that proposition. The most conservative American officials, devotees of "the market," are calling for urgent governmental action. Arthur Burns, the chairman of the Federal Reserve

It is doubtless a good thing to stop hanging on the President's every word, to learn the we cannot look to him to solve all our problems. But it is hand to adjust to a great change expectations at a moment of such disturbing omens in the world

Likes Trappings

The curious thing is that Ford seems to like the trappings of the Imperial Presidency without the substance of power and responsibility. He enjoys the planes are the parties. He snipes at Congress. In recent years there he been talk of dividing the pres-dency into two offices: one cermonial, like a king's, the other political leader's. We may no have the one without the other.

In the end, the vacuum wif somehow be filled. Realists in the administration will keep pressing on such issues as oil use unti promise adjustment to the facts-Congress will dare to legislate on its own, without waiting for draft bills from downtown. With at the difficulties inherent in the idea of leadership from a body of 535 legislators, Congress has a ready shown signs of moving to fill the vacuum.

Journalists, especially the White House press corps, inevitably tend to build up the significance of a president. That is partly habit, partly self-interest in a bettersounding story. It would be honest now to give less emphasis to nonevents-to recognize that we have started a two-year experiment in government without a

We now are at a point in the long fight against capital punishment when such "literary acts" against the vile practice can and should influence the Supreme

Nine Opinions

In a 1972 case challenging the constitutionality of capital punishment the Supreme Court divided 5-4 and produced nine opinions. Since then, approximately 150 people in 17 states have been sentenced to death and 29 states have revised their death penalty statutes. Not surprisingly, the issue is back before the court

In 1972 two justices in the majority said all capital punishment is unconstitutionally "cruel and unusual" But the other three members of the majority said only that death sentences as administered up to then were (in Justice Potter Stewart's words) "cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual"

This majority of the majority noted that many people were being convicted of crimes for which death was an available punishment, but only a few were sentenced to die, and these lew were not selected by discernible standards. The three justices said standardless sentencing is caprice and caprice in dispensing death sentences is unconstitutional cruelty. Recently many states have tried to expunge caprice, often by making the death sentence mandatory for certain crimes.

Now Prof. Charles Black of the Yale Law School has written a 96-page book that expresses its thesis in its title: "Capital Punishment: The Inevitability of Caprice and Mistake" (published by Norton). The book is skill-

The touchstone of strict construction is respect for the intentions of the Constitution's framers. And it is true that the framers, who lived when capital punishment was widely used and not widely questioned, did not intend to ban capital punishmen with the Eighth Amendment.

But it also is true that the framers intended to draft a constitution for the ages. They were concerned with general concepts; not particular conceptions. Their intention was that the Constitution should require the republica ever after, to measure its punishment policies against the wisest, most mature concept of cruelty. They did not want to bind the republic forever to any particular conception of cruelty. The "vague" language of the

Delay Urged By Burns on Gold Owning

Banks Given Warning To Proceed Cautiously

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (AP),-Federal Reserve chairman Arthur Burns today recommended that a ban on private ownership of gold be extended for at least six more months in the United States to protect the dollar and the generally shaky U.S. economy.

Mr. Burns's testimony before the House banking subcommittee on international finance con-flicted with that two days ago by Secretary of the Treasury Wil-liam Simon.

Mr. Simon is a member of President Ford's cabinet and re-flects the opinions of the govnt. Mr. Burns, as chairman of the Federal Reserve System, is independent of the gov-Mr. Simon had said the ban on owning gold should be lifted as scheduled on Jan. 1. He said he envisioned no problems of hoarding or drain from regular hard-hit investment markets. He then astonished the committee by announcing that the government would auction two million ounces of its gold on Jan. 6. Mr. Burns, however, said that the climate of uncertainty that now prevails, with fears of inflation continuing to spread, the opportunity to own gold might seem attractive to large numbers of people in the United States."

Arthur Burns . . . 'People might rush in with funds.'

If that proves true, he said, when the gold market is reopened, people might rush in with funds transferred from savings accounts, common stocks, or other financial assets."

The diversion of dollars could be uncomfortably large, Mr. Burns said, and could adversely affect savings and loan institu-tions and commercial banks, which only recently have begun drawing in more deposits after a long slump.

"Any sizable withdrawal of funds from savings accounts would, of course, dim the prospects for a larger supply of mortgage credit in coming months," Mr. Burns said. "Recovery of the home-building industry might therefore be

He said the risks associated with private ownership of gold could not help the United States in this current economic climate. "The prudent course of action would be to delay the reopening of the gold market until a more propitious time," Mr. Burns said. Mr. Burns also warned U.S. banks to "proceed cautiously" in participating in gold transactions, He said that the Federal Reserve "will watch developments closely" after gold trading becomes legal, and will lose no time in asking Congress to prohibit banks from dealing in gold if excesses occur.

Mr. Burns added that he hopes that banks will not trade in gold for their own accounts but will act only as agents for customers'

U.S. Banks, Brokers Gear for Gold Trade

By Michael C. Jensen

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (NYT).-U.S. banks and brokerage houses are gearing up for the sale of gold bars to Americans, even as a growing controversy swirls around the advisability of such purchases by private investors.

Thousands of Americans are expected to buy gold bullion starting Dec. 31, when a prohibition imposed in 1938 is lifted. As a result, many economists and gold experts expect that more than $1 billion worth of the world's most glamorous metal will be purchased in the first year of open selling.

forward at commodity exchanges and in financial offices in New York and other cities, the debate about gold as an investment

Advocates of gold ownership point to the age-old allire of the precious metal and describe it as a monetary life preserver in a sea of rapidly eroding paper money and rampant inflation.

Some Call It Risky Critics say gold is an overpriced and risky investment that earns no interest and is costly to hold. They say unsophisticated investors can lose heavily if they plunge into gold without studying carefully, What drawbacks should be considered before buying gold? The following are provided by knowledgeable members of the financial community:

• The price outlook is highly uncertain. Just because the price of gold has more than disscripted in a few years, there is no reason to believe that the surge will continue. In an informal poll of gold seminar in New York it was predicted that the price of gold a year from now would be $150 to

• The cost of buying gold will be high. Buyers may have to pay as much as $1,200 for a $1,000 bar of gold. At various times they may be faced with selling commissions. shipping fees, sales taxes, and insurance, storage and assaying

Whereas some investments

terest, gold does not. The only way it can pay off as an invest-ment is for its basic value to in-Speculators who expect heavy investor interest in the United States to drive up the gold price may be disappointed. In Canada, where gold ownership has been allowed for years, interest has been scanty In Japan, where private ownership was recently allowed, there was a brief buying like stocks, bonds, and savings flurry, then a cooling of interest.

By Felix Belair Jr.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (NYT). -Court action to recover millions of dollars invested in an alleged gold coin and silver contract swindle was announced yesterday by the Securities and Exchange

A complaint filed in the federal district court at Las Vegas, Nev., charged that the Western Pacific Gold & Silver Exchange Corp. and its officers wrote and sold gold coin and silver investment contracts without the gold or silver of futures contracts to back them up. Instead according to the complaint, the contracts were paid off with funds obtained from new investors.

The principal individual defeunamed in the suit was James Ray Houston, also known as Sun Ray Star, a resident of Las Vegas and the president and a director of the corporation. As Sun Ray Star, Mr. Houston is listed as chief executive officer of Sun-Star Corp. a purported non-profit organization that owns and controls the Western Pacific concern. The company, also known as Western Pacific Coin

& Silver Exchange Corp., is now

• The company could not and cannot now fulfill its guarantees to repurchase gold coins and silver from its investors at the purchase price plus any profit.

• Investors' funds were not used to acquire gold coins or silver but instead were diverted and converted to the use of the defendants,

· Contrary to investment agreements, silver is not stored in any independent storage facility nor is one investor's silver segregated from that of another. Also little, if any, silver exists m storage for the accounts of investors who requested storage.

N.Y. Stocks Decline Despite Strike's End

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (IHT) .-Prices steadily lost ground on the New York Stock Exchange today and ended sharply lower after an apparent end to the U.S. coal strike failed to kindle a rally.

The Dow Jones industrial average sank 11.58 points to 587.06, close to its 12-year low of 584.56 on Oct. 4 of this year. At 3 o'clock the Dow was off 8.53. Declining issues overwhelmed gains about 1,045 to 325. Volume was a modest 12.89 million shares compared with 12.58 million yesterday.

Through the early parts of the session the market managed to hold a modest gain but in early afternoon it began to decline sbaroly. Brokers related the continuing weakness to a variety of nega-tives. They cited the drop in retail sales last week reported by the Commerce Department in mid-afternoon and the move by Sen, Henry Jackson to introduce a bill authorizing stand-by presidential power for gasoline ration-

October consumer credit growth was the smallest in four years. This was a key depressan analysts commented. A general lack of confidence among investors and institutional fence-sitting were other minuses said to be weighing on the market. Actively traded stocks included Texaco at 20 1/2, of 1/8, General Motors 29 1/8, off 3/8, S.S. Kresge 19 5 8, off 1 1/2 and Johnson & Johnson 78 7/8. down 1.

Some golds and natural gas stocks gained. Homestake Mining added 3/8 to 44, Dome Mines 3/8 to 46 3/8, Campbell Red Lake 1/2 to 31 1/4 and ASA 1/8 to 70 3/4. The American Stock Exchange index closed down 1.11 to 60.26. The most active issue was Brad-

Banque de Bruxelles and Banque Lambert, two major Belglan hanks, will merge in the first quarter of 1975, according to plans disclosed today by the presidents of the two banks.

Stockholders of each bank will be offered shares of a new company, Bruxelles Lambert SA, which is to hold all the stock capital of the merged bank, to be called Banque de Bruxelles ford Computer & Systems, closing at 4 5/8, down 1 on volume of 281,300 shares. In Chicago a good demand produced sharply improved commodity futures gains on the Board of Trade but profit-taking at the close trimmed the gains. Soybeans, meal and oll responded to a good demand early but eased in the closing minutes when professionals were after profits

Soybean oil turned weak in the last minute but meal gained about $4 a ton. Soybeans, up 15 cents early, gained about 11 cents.

Car Sales Dip 34% in U.S. In November

DETROIT, Dec. 5 (AP-DJ).— Auto makers watched their sales plummet 34 per cent last month the worst November for the industry since a General Motors Corp. strike depressed results in

It was the steepest year-toyear sales decline for any month

"I don't think it's going to get any worse." one analyst said, and others concurred. But they quickly added that there were no indications that sales would turn up again soon.

Sales of new cars totaled just over 603,000 units compared with about 912 000 last November. U.S.make new car sales led the decline, sliding 35 per cent to 505,511 from 777,445. Importedcar sales fell 28 per cent to about 97,500 from about 134,500. Price is one reason for the relative strength of imported car sales, which cornered more than 16 per cent of the market last month, compared with less than 15 per cent a year earlier. Many imported car dealers are still selling from relatively large stocks of lower-priced 1974 models But analysts said that even import sales were softening as importers introduce their higherpriced 1975 models. In fact, analysts expressed surprise at the poor performance of some of the leading imports last month. For example, Volks-Toyota deliveries were down 31

per cent and Datsun sales fell 16

PROPERTY DEVELOPMENT IN EUROPE'S REGIONS

INTERNATIONALSREAKSESE

by John Myers,

From conception to fruition a large property development often takes five years or more of effort. Developers at the moment, therefore, are seeking opportunities for the early 1980's. Many are acting on the belief that developments will be concentrated in the industrial heartland of West Germany, the Netherlands and North of France—the regions which grew in importance as coal discoveries provided the energy for new heavy industries. The judgement that growth regions of the past will maintain their dominance has been challenged by the Hudson Institute in Paris—an organization always prepared to ignore grandmother's rule, "Never prophesy,

The Institute's commentators have observed a shift of industry towards coastal zones; and they see a movement of the main areas of economic activity to the countries of the West Mediterranean. They argue that there have been fundamental changes in the factors affecting location decisions. The most important of these changes favour areas with long, deep-water coastlines.

The origin of these predictions guarantees serious attention. They do however imply a far-reaching transformation in the pattern of European economic wealth. Consider Italy as an example. The Italians are heavily oil dependent—one explanation for the balance of payments difficulties. Southern Italy has been a depressed region for many years. Yet, the Hudson Institute researchers foresee Italian economic growth. In the 1980's they believe Southern Italians will have a higher per capita income than the British. Another prophecy is that France will outstrip in economic wealth West Germany, which is "trapped" in an area of Northern Europe with a limited

Assuming the Hudson Institute proves to be accurate in its forecasts, property developers moving early stand to gain considerably. Sites at strategic places for future develop-ments can now be acquired at relatively low prices. Hopefully, they will appreciate in value as demand arises for industrial, commercial and residential developments.

The decision-whether or not to follow the Hudson Institute's advice—is a good illustration of the property developer's marketing dilemma. Taking the counsel and leaping into the unknown risks substantial losses, if West Mediterranean growth fails to materialize. Backing past trends and speculating that Northern Europe will benefit from off-share oil could mean that the best opportunities go to others, if the Hudson Institute's faith in Southern Europe is justified by

THE FABULOUS EGO: ABSOLUTE POWER IN HISTORY

By Milton Klonsky. Suadrangle. 436 pp. Illustrated. 21: Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

WHILE many writers have maintained that power corrupts, and some that absolute power corrupts absolutely, Milton Klonsky shows us, in "The Fabulous Ego," exactly how it corrupted 15 of the most potent monarchs in history. We see power galvanizing their imaginations like a hallucinogenic drug until their free associations be-came the fate of their people. Their appetites were the equivalent of our national budget.

Absolute power results in something like antism. With no equals, no one to answer or oppose him, the absolute ruler addresses his actions to himself alone. His "insanity" may either oppress his people or become the amusement. Vanity is a great builder of monuments, and some of the architectural wonders of the world owe it their origins. As the planners of the Seville cathedral said, "It shall be so great, posterity will think us

Given the perspective of our times, when income tax has deprived our rich of most of their paltry eccentricity, we can hardly help seeing as a madman a ruler like the Emperor Shih Huang Ti, who, in the third century BC, "built 270 fully equipped and interconnected palaces, each one the replica of a palace that had once belonged to a defeated king or feudal warlord, forming a belt 70 miles wide around his capital." Or the 12th-century Cambodian monarch who constructed "an immense four-sided tower from which he could gaze out over 250 colossal stone images of himself" idealized as various deities. Or Harun al-Rashid, the caliph of Baghdad who in the eighth century built a city on the banks of the Euphrates "that duplicated all the principal sites, monuments and buildings" of the Greek city of Heracles simply because a beautiful slave girl he had bought there was homesick. There is a kind of negative illumination in such gestures, a monstrous transcendence of the ordinary human lot, an illustration of the extremities to which personality can be stretched. As Mr. Klonsky points out, using Shakespeare's line, "Their actions are our dreams," and even this is a modest appraisal. One gets the unwilling impression that, just as our incomes have been progressively leveled over the centuries se has the size of my gestures. But this is unfair, no more than a nostalgia for the grandiose at any cost.

Perhaps the greatest of all idiosyncratics was Elagabalus, the third-century emperor Rome. On a whim, he sent his slaves out to find a thousand pounds of cobwebs. When they returned with 10,000, he remarked: "From this, one can understand how great a city is Rome." A champion conspicuous consumer, Elagabalus never wore the same ring twice, nor, by extension, slept more than once with the same woman. Anticipating some of our modern extravagances, he had several richly laden ships sunk in the harbor because it was "a sign of great-ness of soul." At his frequent banquets, he sometimes served his guest sculptures, paintings or embroideries of food simultaneously mocking art and, perhaps elevating it to an organic role in life. Like Nero, Elagabalus had trick cellings in his palace which, when reversed dumped tons of flowers on his guests. Like Nero too, he smothered a few of them with flattery.

All of these brief biographies. were excerpted by Mr. Klonsky from accounts of contemporaries or near-contemporaries, so that one gets a sense of dramatic immediacy of an "eyewitness" view of these megalomaniac poets. His introductions to the biogra-Solution to Previous Puzzle phies are concise, ironical and we need to know in order to these rulers framed by time a circumstances. Some of the pieces have been translated h English for the first time otherescued from the undeser obscurity of rare-book room: the library.

We notice certain patter emerging in these portraits unlimited power. Narcissian inhuman indifference, is perla the most common Cruelty, a more positive human form of indifference a close second. Tameriane to 14th-century Mogul ruler to allegedly made a pyramid 80,000 of his enemies' seven heads, was only more direct explicit than some of the other. explicit than some of the other One might also say that por perverts: we read again and ago of polymorphous orgies and we der how much worse these mo archs might have been with this particular form of release

Napoleon is the saddest & of all. We find him in exite St. Helena, still thinking of hi self as "master of the work endlessly replaying, like a Ma day-morning quarterback, t Battle of Waterloo, citing a hu dred concrete "if's" which can him to lose the battle that char ed the course of history—at then blaming it on "fate" well Everything but himse His conversational powers &co to shrink with his military migh we hear him debating with a women over thin ones, blond over brunettes. In the san tone, he complains about his a breaking its tether and a h million men lost at Moscov.

"The Fabulous Ego" is a in liant entertainment and a waing too, in its own way, a r minder of the darker lusts to still beat in our blood. If he he lived in another time, h Klonsky might have been warded for the pleasure he h given us as the Persian po Salin al-Khasir was when h verses delighted the wife Harun al-Rashid. She "had h mouth stuffed with as mar pearls as it could hold."

NEW YORK, Dec 5 (IHT). This is how critics for The New York Times rate new stage productions:

- "As You Like It" produced by Clifford Williams with an almale cast is inspired by Jan Kotta's book "Shakespeare, Oir Contemporary." Kotta's book emphasized the sexual ambiguity in many Shakespeare plays to female parts being played staged seven years ago, and Office Barnes now finds it rather of of date: "This is a production retreat of its time." The man difference between the new par duction and the London version of seven years ago is in the r Gregory Floy and presented a rather pretty girl being acid by a man." Barnes says, "This" by no means bad acting; the company is perfectly adequate by it would be unfortunate for ever one if it were mistaken & Britain's National Theatre, of spite the friendly 'personal me sage' from Leurence Olivier pris ed in the program."

- "To the Rhythm of the Sen" a Polish production based of poems by Urszula Koziol, M Gussow says that "the playnothing less than the story mankind from the crest through heaven and hell, flight of Icarus, and on to the future—a ringing of bells as i call to action. The play is per formed in Polish with occasions interpolations of Miss Kosley lyrics in English. Despite language barrier, the play is times perhaps too obvious." Ho ever Gussow finds the music score by Zbigniew Piotrows "pleasant," although it is no played live, thereby losing so of its effectiveness. This line of play would have worked out well if West had held at least three clubs, a 50-50 chance. The best play, by a normal margin, was to lead a low trump from the dummy at the second trick. This wins if East has a doubleton or tripleton diamond king, and if West produces the king and plays a heart to

For Tarnished Idols

By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (NYT).-During the major league baseball meetings, the trades that are consummated are seldom as fascinating as those that aren't. The amnouncements are seldom as fascinating as the whispers. The most fascinating whisper for New York consumption is that the Mets preferred to retain Jon Matlack, their almost lethal lefthanded pitcher, tather than swap him to the Oakland A's for Reggie Jackson, the proven slugger and storm center.

In some corners, that whisper has an asterisk-the A's also demanded a second baseman. But on an even-up basis, Matlack would be an appropriate ransom. Jackson would provide the Mets with a thunderclap hitter, a species they have never possessed. He would make the summer more pleasant and more productive for all the pitchers, including the one who moved into Matlack's turn in the rotation.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 5 (UPI).—Charles Finley, owner. of the Oakland A's, has turned down a $1-million offer for outfielder Reggie Jackson.

The offer was made by Ewing Kauffman, owner of the Kansas City Royals, When he heard the bid. Finley said: 'No, what I said was I'd take two million "

Later, Finley also said he would take the same sum for Sal Bando, his third baseman. When that information was celayed to Boston general nanager Dick O'Connell, he

Tuesday to the Philadelphia Phillies for Del Unser, Mac Scarce and John Steams, most of the idol-worshipers at Shea Stadium remembered only his great seasons. They forgot, or didn't want to remember, last season. But the Mets' new general manager, Joe McDonald, remembered. When he succeeded Bob Scheffing several weeks ago, McDonald was asked if there were any untouchables on

"Untouchables," he replied, "is an old TV show." When the deal with the Phillies developed, McDonald also remembered how the Mets' pattern last season was determined on opening day. The Mets were winning, 4-3, in the ninth luming when Mike Schmidt hit a two-rum homer off McGraw, who had relieved Seaver in the eighth. The beneficiary of the

Chile' 5-4 victory that day, coincidentally, was Scarce, whom the Mets hope will be pientiful as a bullpen savior. And by disposing of two outfielders who never made it and probably never will, Don Hahn and Dave Schneck, along with McGraw, the Mets really traded one for three. Unser is a centerfielder with good range and an adequate bat. Steams in a 23year-old catcher with the vast potential presumed in the second thoice, behind David Clyde of the Texas Rangers in the 1973 free-agent draft. McDonald, who earlier obtained Joe Torre and

Gene Clines, obviously isn't afraid to make a move. More important, he's not afraid to trade a tarnished idol. The Mets' former general manager, Scheffing, preferred to trade nonidols. It worked when he acquired Rusty Staub and Felix Millan, but it backfired when he discarded Nolan Ryan

Took It Hard

It is never easy to dispose of an idol, neither for the general manager nor the idol himself. McGraw took it hard at first but he soon settled into his usually optimistic manner. Several hours after the trade, he answered the telephone in his home near San Diego by announcing:

Welcome to the Phillies' training camp." Slowly he had accepted the deal, even saying, "The Phillies are ripe for a pennant." And they are. He just might pitch them to it. But the Mets had to take that chance. He understood. He didn't even sound annoyed that none of the three players obtained by the Mets have accomplished what he has. "That really isn't important to me," he said. "I'm not gold

He sounded disturbed when informed that McDonald had mentioned that "Tug had two bad years in a row, except for the last six weeks in 1973." But those last six weeks provided the Mets with a 3-2 lead in the World Series before the A's won the last two games.

They didn't mention that when they gave me a $15,000 raise to $90,000," McGraw said. 'It couldn't have been that bad a year."

But the Mets lost that World Series on Reggie Jackson's Thunderclaps. They needed a thunderclap hitter in their batting order.

of 3 minutes 10 and 3/10ths of a 1:40.36, he began receiving victory second.

But Gros came shooting through the 68 gates of the second course in superb time—1:06.34 at the intermediate point—and the Italian camp began shouting as that time was shown on the electronic timing board, Embraced by Officials As the champion finished in 1:38.49—the only afternoon run under 1:40—he was embraced and thumped by the same officials who had notally berated him after the morning run.

"I knew I had to risk every thing and go all-out," Gros said after he clambered down from the shoulders of Italian fans. Stenmark, who startled the sking world last season by finishing 12th in his first year of World Cup competition, was pleased and cheerful afterward.

"I am not disappointed." he said. "I did not take it carefully on the second leg, but perhaps I could have been more aggres-

3d Baseball League Is Proposed

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 5 (UPD. -Walter O'Malley proposed today that two major league frauchises be moved and that a third major league be created. O'Mal-ley, owner of the Los Angeles Dodgers, made the proposals between Commissioner Bowie Knhn and the owners. His plan calls for baseball to buy the Oakland A's and move the franchise to Seattle, and to also purchase the Baltimore Orioles and move them to Washington

An alternate plan by O'Malley is to establish a third major league comprised of franchises in Seattle, Washington, New Orleans, Toronto, Buffalo and Denver. Under O'Malley's proposal, the franchises would be developed for three or four years and then embraced into the present them embraced into the present them. and then embraced into the pres-

Seattle operated temporarily in the American League before the franchise was moved to Mil-waukee in 1970. Since then, Seattle civic officials have brought a multimillion-dollar suit against baseball. Washington has been without baseball for two years, and as recently as yesterday Kuhn declared that he was anxious for major league basehall to return there.

Kuhn met with the owners again today and, although every-body was tight-lipped at the conclusion of the two-hour session, UPI learned that O'Malley's plan has been turned over to a committee for further study. On the player trading front, the Detroit Tigers traded veteran naw Woody Fryman yester day to the Montreal Expos in return for righthander Tom Walker and catcher Terry Humphrey. Fryman 34 had a 6-9 record

His reference was to the worst financial disaster in the history of professional sports in the United States, meaning an overall deficit of about $20 million with no relief in sight.

Have to Play

"Wait a minute," Homan said, "We play good football. There are people out there who watch us and maybe even need us. We have to play this game." Homan has experienced five paid years and qualification for the pension plan in the National Football League.

Why should mature athletes in the entertainment business play for what amounts to less than the back pay or next to nothing? Is this the Little League?

"In a way yes, it is," Homan continued, "Anyone who has never been on a team maybe wouldn't understand this. You play for all the reasons—pride, skill, sharing. Let's face it. We all love this game. We who know how to play it at its best. The money, or no money, matters. But that comes second for the time it takes to play this game."

The Americans had a sharp drill yesterday that did not look much different from what the Miami Dolphins, the paid champions of the other league, will be doing today. Homan caught the drilled passes from George Mira and Matthew Reed. Mira is another emigrant from the NFL, and Reed an untried talent out of Grambling College, a well used resource of the NFL

Bowl-Selection Method Is Changed by Big 10

CHICAGO, Dec. 5 (AP).—The on probation by Duke for his Big 10 revised its controversial public comments.

Page Rowl selection to Rose Bowl selection procedure yesterday by approving a new method that virtually eliminates a conference vote,

A controversy over the selection procedure arose when the athletic directors awarded a Rose Bow berth this year to Ohio State for the third straight time, despite Michigan University's third straight tie for the conference

The new procedure has the following formula:

• The conference champion determined by the highest winning percentage of conference games, will receive the Rose Bowl berth. • If there is a tle, the winner of the regular season game between the two co-champions will represent the conference.

 If there is a tie and the two teams did not meet during the regular season, the representative will be determined by the highest winning percentage of all games played, including nonconference. In the event that more than two teams tie for the Big-10 title. the selection procedure may still boil down to a vote by the athletic directors. But such an event is

The commissioner, Wayne Duke, said that conference officials also discussed the prospect of conference teams playing in bowl games other than the Rose Bowl

"No specific action was taken, but the subject will be discussed in future meetings," he said. Duke said that teams such as Michigan, Michigan State and Wisconsin were worthy contenders in consideration for other bowls

Ohio State got the nod this year on the strength of its victory over Michigan, 12-10, which gave each of the teams a 10-1 won-lost record and a 7-1 mark in Big-10 play this season. Ohio State will face Southern California on New Year's Day. In 1972. Ohio State was chosen under the league's no-repeat rule, since voided. In 1973, after Michigan and Ohio State tied, 10-10, and were tied for the conference title, the athletic directors voted, 6-4, to send the Buckeyes to the Rose Bowl again. # Partial Redress

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON Here is an traffic in color photographs of bare people. One draws the line at nothing these days in the quest for significance

In an avalanche of meaningless events, who is to say that these fetchingly undraped thichs and pectorals have less to tell us about The Times in Which We Live than the latest flight of Henry Kissinger, the economic pronouncements of Gerald Ford, the crop analyses of Earl Butz?

Yes, something is happening in America. The evidence is here. Something very interesting. Could it be momentous? I refer to all these pictures of men stripped down to bare pelts. Not a stitch between them and the lens.

Supposedly, these pictures are meant to exploit the feminine libido, as the nude Kewpies of Hugh Hefner were supposed to inflame the male, and perhaps Playgirl-Oui-Viva and other magazines of this sort apparently believe it does. But what is curious here is that as the undressed man becomes a commonplace on the magazine rack the undressed woman is beginning to put her clothes back on.

The evidence is most pronounced in Penthouse, where garters and stockings are flashing this month with a flourish reminiscent of the old Police Gazette Having taken feminine undress to a point at which it had begun to suggest medical-school anatomy class, Penthouse and its companions now appear to be having second

Putting elastic and gauze back on the women, then, appears to be a reactionary development to the recent "sexual revolution," taking us back to an unenlightened era when women were thought to be more provocative if gussied up in snaps, bows and frills.

Soldiers in Belgium Help With Harvest

BRUSSELS, Dec. 5 (UPI).-The Belgian Army is helping to harvest thousands of acres of sugar beets. Record rains this autumn seriously delayed the harvesting of crops—particularly sugar beets but also potatoes and corn. About 50 per cent of these crops are still in the fields.

But if this is so, how do we acarmful of magazines that count for the rising fashion in men naked as jaybirds? An explanation will have to take into account the disappearance of the sex goddess, that totemic fig-Tre of popular American culture created by the movies-Jean Harlow, Lana Turner, Jane Russell, Marilyn Monroe—who enabled the dimmer-witted males to visualize their fantasies of relations between the sexes.

There has been no bone fide sex goddess since Marilyn Monroe's death in the early 1960s, and there is none in sight. From Janis Joplin to Rhoda, we have had a consistent run of anti-sex goddesses for the past decade.

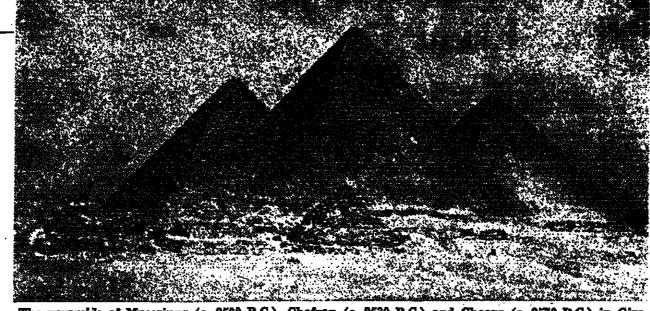

As women have adopted more natural dress, makeup, hair styling and social habits, men seem less prone to treat them as fantasies. In the same period, we have seen the development of what might be called the sex god the fantasized male sex object done up like a peacock in seaweed hair, pants tight as corsets, flowing blouses, gaudy colors, ear-rings, elevator shoes, wet-look plastic, mean-look leather, suitrylook Hindu drapings and French flared skirts on his suit.

From Jimi Hendrix to the androgynous Mick Jagger, we have had a consistent run of sex gods compensating for the rise of the anti-sex goddess, and this has happened not only in high pop circles. Across the corn belt these days, even the town embalmer slips into flared double-knits cinched with a four-inch belt before heading for the Legion Hall on Friday night for his bourbon

God and goddesses of sex, being creations of fantasy, move their worshippers with desire to know them, and to know them completely, and the laws that made it possible for the magazines to pass utter nudity through the U.S. mails also made it possible for everybody to satisfy that desire. Playboy showed us almost everything we had wanted to know about the sex goddess, and Penthouse showed us the rest, and when the demonstration began to suggest ether and formaldehyde more strongly than French perfume, the goddess stopped being a goddess and the fantasy lost its

And so, garters, stockings and negligees are rushed to the studio, probably too late for a resurrection Meantime the brand new sex god gets full exposure as just another guy standing around the locker room, and another fantasy heads off into banality.

This time next year he will probably appear in gym socks.

The pyramids of Mycerinus (c. 2500 B.C.), Chefren (c. 2530 B.C.) and Cheops (c. 2570 B.C.) in Giza.

Great Pyramid Impervious to Radar Assault

By David Michelmore

CAIRO (AP).—After baffling explorers and archaeologists for 4,500 years, Chefren's giant pyramid at Giza has turned back man's most sophisticated attempt to find the pharach's

An expedition of a dozen U.S. and Egyptian physicists (IHT, Aug. 3), hoping to use short-range radar waves to "see" through the sides of the pyramid and spot the suspected chamber, has given up.

The scientists found that the radar signals, transmitted by a 30,000-volt "sounder," disappeared after traveling only a few feet because of the unexpectedly high moisture content in the pyramid, according to an official of the American Research Center in Egypt.

"They've gone back to the drawing board," he said after abrupt breakup of the Stanford Research Institute-Ain Shams University expedition. The group had hoped that the location of the pyramid in the desert about five miles southwest of Cairo would be an ideal environment to test the technique of using radar waves to probe solid objects.

Disagreement

Not all Egyptologists agree that Chefren's burial chamber is "missing." The Italian explorer Glovanni Belozoni in 1818 rediscovered a chamber and empty sarcophagus which many claim is Chefren's only burial vault.

But others think it odd that Chefren would have settled for a single, easily accessible vault after his father, Cheops, had built several interconnected chambers inside his nearby

The mystery is tantalizing, for if Chefren's tomb does exist, and has not been robbed, its treasures would certainly surpass the rich and now famous treasures of Tutankhamen, a far less

Egyptian authorities are among the most anxious to make use of advanced technology in hunting for and making sense of Egypt's pharaonic, Greek and Islamic past. There is talk of using infrared serial photography to chart ancient sites, and of using remote-controlled mini-cameras to photograph Chefren's

A team of physicists from the University of California at Berkeley successfully used "nuclear fingerprinting" to determine exactly where the colossi of Memnon were quarried. But they could only guess how the 1.5 million tons of stone were

Computer Help

A University of Pennsylvania Museum project, now in its eighth year, is using a computer to help piece together some 25,000 blocks from the temple of the so-called "heretic pharach," Akhensten. The temple was dismantled about 3,300 years ago by Akhenaten's successors in protest of the monotheism of the pharach and his queen, Nofretete.

Although the computer stores up to 50 bits of information about the paris of scenes depicted on each block, the workers on the project say they depend more on their eyes than on the computer in reassembling the temple, using thumbnail-sized photographs of each carved stone.

Nonetheless, the computer's store of information has already provided grist for several scholarly articles and will keep the project in order as remaining thousands of pieces in the giant ligsaw ouzzle are discovered.

Despite the Stanford-Ain Shams group's failure to make the new radar technique work, the head of the expedition, U.S. physicist Lambert Dolphin, is convinced that his theory is sound and could well provide a boon to archaeologists once it

Mr. Dolphin envisions a more sophisticated model of his signaling device, coupled to a computer and receiver, and mounted on a golf cart, traveling over unexcavated sites hunting for the walls of ancient temples and tombs.

"We're not competing with regular archaeologists," Mr. Dolphin said of his expedition's unorthodox plunge into Egyptology, but we think we might be able to tell them: We think you should dig here'."
